Each teapot is hand-made in London through our close collaboration with two specialist makers, reflecting a long history of clay and natural fibres being used in tandem. The ceramic body is wheel-thrown using high-iron stoneware before being Tenmoku glazed and reduction-fired, resulting in a rich, dark surface with subtle variations from piece to piece.

Once fired, each pot is taken to our weaver, who creates a bespoke handle tailored to its form and scale. The handles are made from round cane drawn from the inner core of the rattan palm, first softened in water, then shaped by hand.
